

Idea election

Why play this game?

Develops quick thinking and idea generation and shares the expertise in the room.

How does it work?

1. Four participants are selected to take part in the game.
2. Game Leader announces the overall topic for the game (word pictures, competition speaking, best looking National Education Directors etc)
3. Game Leader then reads out categories related to the game topic from a card (1 category per card)
4. Each time the participants come up with an example of the category (up to 30 seconds to describe their idea).
5. The people not taking part in the game then vote for which idea they like best.
6. The winner each round gets the card and at the end of the game the participant with the most cards wins!

What do we need?

Cards with categories and someone keeping score.

Let's mix it up!

- If the voting can be instantaneous (through pointing at people) then the game participants can take part in the voting as well. No voting for yourself!
- Make the game "elimination style" so that every round the participant with the least votes is removed from the game.
